It was learned that only three men were let into the accret originally. They were Croker, Carroll and Mayor Van Wyck. The other six Tammany men now holding slock were "tipped" off by some one of these men and advised to invest in the company's shares. The investment did not pay as well as expected, but the politicians were told to "hold on." The importance of this advice was not apparent until the announcement came a few weeks ago that the price had been raised 100 per cent. Then the Tammany stocsholiers began to figure on their possible dividends.
